

STEPPING 2021 ANNUAL REPORT INTO OUR POWER

Dear friends,

I've heard it said that organizational transformation takes a full seven years. For re:power, that began in 2017. Since then, we have been in a steady state of transition. Each year, we've had forward momentum as we've taken steps towards becoming more fully what we hope to truly be. As I look back on 2021, our fifth year of transformation, it's evident how much progress we've made. It all adds up to an incredible journey—one in which each year has represented a necessary and important stage in our growth and development.

I started 2021 with a clear theme in mind: “Stepping Into Our Power.” This was the year to make the key decisions that would lead us into the next chapter. Today, I can truly feel a difference in the air at re:power. We've decided what we stand for, and we've found our confidence in living that identity. We're unapologetic about our work and what matters to us, and we're pushing the boundaries with cutting-edge programming. We're unafraid to take bigger, bolder steps and it's paying off.

The greatest catalyst for our success was our belief in ourselves and our winning strategy of investing in BIPOC folks combined with the resources to execute that strategy. Our results in 2021 tell us that our efforts to assert our leadership are bearing fruit: our power is being recognized and validated out in the world. As we begin to embrace this power, we can feel that we're onto something big and that we're destined to be more than just another training organization. Our accomplishments in 2021 are beginning to point the way to this bigger vision, as well as to the fact that we'll be ready to meet our movement with a healthy and sustainable organization.

I hope you see what I see in re:power—an organizing home for Black, Indigenous and other people of color; a space for women, trans and gender expansive people of color to discover and wield their own power; and a place of joy and abundance—where we set our sights on a north star and build the power and capacity to get there! I can't wait to keep sharing what is coming for re:power—stay with us. We're not done transforming yet!

Yours in Partnership,

Karundi Williams
Executive Director, re:power

re:power provides clear, high-quality, accessible, and thoughtful training to organizers and grassroots folks. Information is current and relevant and takes a racial equity (and LGBTQ+ affirming) lens—something which you don't often see. I know that by recommending re:power to my networks, they will not only deliver high-quality content, but do so in a safe, affirming, and thoughtful space.

Grassroots Organizing: Storytelling Academy

Our public trainings are the heartbeat of our organization. In 2021, we unveiled a new Grassroots Organizing training focused on supporting grassroots organizers to hone their storytelling abilities and learn how to coach others' stories. Through narrative and storytelling, we—as individuals, communities and nations—can learn how to make choices in response to the challenges of the uncertain world we live in. Narrative is how we communicate our values through stories, bringing alive the motivation we need for changing the world. Because it engages the head and the heart, narrative can instruct and inspire, not only teaching us about why we should act but also moving us to take action.

Knowing that there are so many different contexts where organizers need to use storytelling—from building relationships with community members to moving legislators on issues—we responded with a powerful course to help participants develop stories that call people to action. Participants learned the public narrative framework and developed stories about why they are called to leadership (“story of self”), how their values are connected to the collective values of their communities (“story of us”), and what challenges to our values demand urgent action (“story of now”).

Wonderfully supportive. Awesome. Uncomfortable and appreciated.”

As an organizer, I know the importance of storytelling but wanted to hone my skills. The trainers were incredible and being able to craft stories with other movement organizers was invaluable. I will be applying many of the tools provided in my call to actions.

NEW / MODE

Especially for young and new organizers, these courses are such a good entry point into how to actually do campaign work. Explicit training on hard skills is still missing on many campaigns who don't have the capacity or time to train up their team, so re:power is filling a key role.

PARTNER TRAINING

Our largest partnership in 2021 was with the Future Coalition, a national youth-led group of youth-led organizations fighting against the climate crisis. We executed seven distinct trainings with curriculum ranging from Introduction to Organizing to Action Safety & Police Liaising, and served as strategic consultants on their campaign, structure, and leadership development plans. Through all of this, we trained nearly 1,000 participants, making this one of the largest comprehensive training series held for youth climate justice organizers ever.

We also supported a successful day of action on October 29, 2021 that saw youth groups in 40 different cities staging actions to hold the financial industry accountable for their financing of fossil fuels.

Working with re:power was not only the right decision for educating our base of BIPOC youth activists, but the right decision for the growth and development of our team as well. They are true masters of their craft and every person who engaged with their training programs—staff or participant—walked away with a valuable gift for their grassroots campaigns.
